gried in more trades them one. "Carmina Paullus emit; recitat sur carmina Nam quod emas, possis dicere jure turm." Others, with more honesty, acknowledge their indebtedness to the great masters of pulpit oratory, whose sermous they revl. Unlimpity, modern preachers are, as a rule, utterly unacquirated with the principles of elecution, and thes their landable design of introducing their hearers to the works of the great divines is frishrated by the bidness of their realing. Those who depend on their own resources areabout equally divided us to the method of delivery. There are special morits and special. defects in light asternore and written dis: courses. The former alford scope for the exercise of declarators powers, if the prescher possesses any a the latter for the presentation of a connected and continuous againment, if the d preacher is capable of arguing. But extempore reaching is apt to lead a man into frequent repetitions, and into the habit of substituting loase generalities for convincing reasoning. And written sermons lose much of their effect by the indolence of their composors in not committing them to memory, and by the inartistic-we might almost add, the incoherent way in which they are often read.

Either style, however, in preferable to the hybrid system adopted by some tersous, of sometimes trusting to memory and sometimes. referring to notes. Between the two, the grater ite and so ridentous a plan has been deservedly yu | eatirized :--"Our rector—dear good man—determines His flock shall well instructed her Therefore he writes out half his sermons, And half he gives extempore. But every Sunday (fate decreed it) From January to December.

The half he writes he cannot read it.

The other half he can't remember? That preaching has fallen into comparative neglect cannot, we think, be denied by any mapartial observer. It is still adhered to as a custom, but it is too rarely felt as an influence. and It is like a dead branch that still remains on the tree, but has ceased to bring forth leaves the tree, but has ceased in the said fruit. Preaching, which is, in theory, the the teaching of thousands by one man, must depend for its very existence on the must depend for its very existence on the capability of the teacher to teach, and on the trust of the listeners in their monitor. It is not likely that educated Englishman, in the not is not likely that educated Englishman in the innot nineteenth century, will be swayed by the imified perfectly pronounced attenuess of "literate

If preaching is once more to become a living influence, sermous intust be characterized by greater intellectual force and Even freshmess, and premiers must display more arise aptitude and greater entrestness than are normally to be met with.

Desertion and the Bounty System. (From the Pall Mall Gazelle.) . Nearly a year ago we called attention to the operation of the army branty system, that niged system under which, by way of stimulating time a collistment and supplementing the blandisheceiv- ments of the recruiting sergeaut, we offer to a bine every man who may come forward a bonns of money, the amount of which varies according stent, to the exigencies of the moment-a honus which is high in war time, low in times of peace; but " and which, high or low, is enormously prejudicial, which as every officer of experience will testify, to the that interests of the Burvice. We were careful, too, il con- to explain that contrary to the common belief, The the evils of the system are in an approximate inwhile it attracts usiny blackguards, will also atis; no- tract a certain percentage of good men. But it a rule, is doubtful if a single respectable recruit is nearly over obtained by a bounty of £1. The men tion of | whom such a bounty does attends are precisely. Never- the very men whom the army would be very ined to much better without—the men who traffic in ish the these petty pickings, whose military career is dy the made up of desertions and re-enlistments, inwe be duced directly by the miserable shillings which marity | each such describer and re-enlistment brings to of their pockets. To their pockets searcely, since minster the maney is no sconer handled than it is spent -spent in a few nights of riot and dissipation; Tusser spent in generating vice and in spreading con-verge, tamination. This, we believe is no exaggerated nichare of the effects of the bounty system; 1 is a picture which fails even faintly to indicate all the cylls of which that system is the parent. On case in aformeroccasionwe pointed our argument on this subject by reconnting the history of a nun called Brennan, who enlisted live times and described fone, before he was brought to justice But Brennan was a mere bangier to a cerain "John Smith" (with we know not how many of the aliases), who was lately tried at Woolwich by

This sum represents, the amount which, exclusive of the enlistment expenses, of pay and other incidental charges, the country had the privilege of paying for Mr. Smith's valuable services for a period of less than eighteen months.
